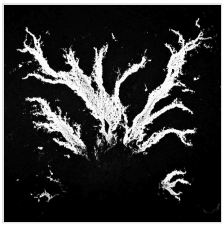
WORKS



Vibrotanica

INSTALLATIONS

An immersive interactive installation using bioelectrical sensors to capture plant bio-signals and transform them into real-time sound and visuals, connecting humans and nature.

Vibrotanica is an immersive interactive audiovisual installation exploring the symbiotic relationship between humans and plants. Bioelectrical sensors capture micro-electrical variations in plants and transform them into real-time sounds and visuals — every interaction with a plant triggers a unique audiovisual response. The work raises awareness about biodiversity, fosters empathy towards nature, and invites reflection on our connection to the environment.

Released: August 27, 2024 • Location: TBD (work in progress)

SUPREMA

PERFORMANCES

The composer was commissioned to create music for choreographer Tímea Sebestyén's contemporary dance work.

The composer was commissioned to create music for choreographer Tímea Sebestyén's contemporary dance work. The soundtrack comprises several compositions including a series titled "Tape," referencing machinery invented by Dr. William Moulton Marston, creator of Wonder Woman. The composer incorporated "sound references to the different mechanical parts" and piano hammer sounds representing the character's voice. Additional tracks included "Nutter," addressing "a lost mind leaning towards schizophrenia," and a remixed version of "False Truths" for the performance climax. The performance examines Wonder Woman as "a female ideal created by dr. William Moulton Marston," exploring her character through a female perspective. It investigates "layers of our personality through our desires, sexuality, and fears," questioning concepts of female power and identity.

Released: January 1, 2019 • Location: Budapest, Hungary • Collaborators: Tímea Sebestyén (choreography), Jérôme Li-Thiao-Té (music composer), Mészáros Csaba (photography)

Building up creativity

FILMS

A composer-producer contributed to this dance short film examining PhD research on how people evaluate creative ideas.

A composer-producer contributed to this dance short film examining PhD research on how people evaluate creative ideas. The project visualizes creativity as "a room which needs to be furnished in order to see how the different components add up." The work compares laypeople and experts, analyzing how four criteria—usefulness, originality, riskiness, and growth potential—influence creativity judgments. The research found laypeople possess "a robust internalized model of creativity" despite processing noise, while experts demonstrate synchronized, clockwork-like precision in assessment criteria.

Released: January 1, 2017 • Location: London, UK / Budapest, Hungary • Collaborators: Judit Pétervári (researcher/creator), JLTT - Jérôme Li Thiao-Té (composer/producer), Queen Mary University of London

Modular Layout Example

INSTALLATIONS, COMMISSIONS

A comprehensive demonstration of the modular layout system, showcasing flexible content sections and customizable presentation options.

This template demonstrates the standard modular layout system with all basic module types: hero-image, text, image-grid, metadata, quote, spacer, linked-events, iframe, and description. Each module can be freely positioned in any order to create custom layouts. Use this as a reference for understanding how to combine different modules to tell your work's story effectively.

Centralized Metadata Example

RELEASES

Demonstrates the new centralized metadata system where metadata is defined once in front matter and automatically used across all modules.

This template demonstrates the centralized metadata architecture where all metadata fields (year, location, role, technology, collaborators, etc.) are defined once in the front matter and automatically available to all modules. This eliminates duplication and ensures consistency across multiple metadata displays. Any module that uses metadata will automatically pull from the centralized definition.
